

USING TRACKER APPS WITH YOUR STUDENTS

Skill Tracker is part of the TrackerApps software that helps students track their skill progress. Students can track via the app or logging in through the portal via web browser. In order to support students in logging skills, you may need to remind them on a regular basis until it becomes a habit. Here are some key moments where you can encourage students to log skills to track their progress.

Explicitly teaching a skill

After demonstrating a particular skill for your students, allow them a few minutes to log their progress in Skill Tracker

End of a lesson

After a lesson, allow students a few minutes to reflect on what skills they used during the lesson. Make sure they have a few minutes to log their skill development and include evidence of their learning

Homework

Remind students that they can log skills when they are completing homework. Students can reflect on what skills they were using while doing homework and log this in Skill Tracker

Tutor/Advisory group

Students can use Skill Tracker to log skills that are often the focus of these classes eg communication, interpersonal skills, resilience, risk-taking and reflection

Students working independently

During a period where students are working independently or in small groups, remind them that they can log this activity in Skill Tracker as a record of their skill development

Sports teams, service and extracurricular

Reflecting on skill development during extracurricular activities by using Skill Tracker can promote interdisciplinary learning and skill transfer
